What is a 10 Hole Diatonic Harmonica?

The 10-hole diatonic harmonica is a small, handheld instrument that consists of ten holes, each of which is tuned to a different note. The holes are arranged in a single row, and the player blows into or draws air through the holes to produce sound. The diatonic harmonica is a diatonic instrument, which means that it can play only the notes of a particular scale. The most common scale for a diatonic harmonica is the major scale, but there are also harmonicas that are tuned to other scales, such as the minor scale and the blues scale.

Eb Harmonica

The Eb harmonica is a diatonic harmonica that is tuned to the key of Eb. This means that the root note of the scale is Eb, and the other notes in the scale are F, G, Ab, Bb, C, D, and Eb. The Eb harmonica is a popular choice for blues and rock players, as it is well-suited for playing in those genres.
