The new community of handmade is a vibrant and growing community of people who are passionate about making things by hand. They come from all walks of life and have a wide range of skills and interests, but they all share a common desire to create something unique and special.

The handmade community is a welcoming and supportive place, where people can share their ideas, learn from each other, and collaborate on projects. There are many ways to get involved in the handmade community, whether you're a beginner or a seasoned pro.

Here are a few ideas:

- Join a local handmade group or guild. There are many local handmade groups and guilds that meet regularly to share ideas, learn new skills, and work on projects together. These groups are a great way to connect with other makers in your area and get involved in the handmade community.
- Take a class or workshop. There are many classes and workshops available that can teach you new handmade skills or help you improve your existing skills. These classes are a great way to learn from experienced makers and get started on your own handmade projects.
- Attend a handmade fair or market. Handmade fairs and markets are a great way to meet other makers, see their work, and get inspired. You can also sell your own handmade items at these events.
- Start a blog or website about your handmade projects. Sharing your handmade projects with others is a great way to connect with other makers and get feedback on your work. You can also use your blog or website to sell your handmade items.
- Join an online handmade community. There are many online handmade communities where you can connect with other makers from all over the world. These communities are a great way to share ideas, learn new skills, and collaborate on projects.

The handmade community is a great place to connect with other people who share your passion for making things by hand. Whether you're a beginner or a seasoned pro, there are many ways to get involved in the community and share your love of handmade.

Here are a few stories from members of the handmade community:

- Susan is a self-taught knitter who started making hats for her friends and family. She quickly realized that she had a talent for knitting and soon started selling her hats online. Her business has since grown and she now sells her hats to customers all over the world.
- John is a retired engineer who started woodworking as a hobby. He quickly discovered that he had a knack for making beautiful furniture. He now sells his furniture at local art fairs and markets.
- Mary is a stay-at-home mom who started making jewelry as a way to express her creativity. She quickly realized that she had a talent for making beautiful jewelry and soon started selling her pieces online. Her business has since grown and she now has her own jewelry line.

These are just a few stories from the many people who are involved in the handmade community. The handmade community is a vibrant and growing community of people who are passionate about making things by hand. They come from all walks of life and have a wide range of skills and interests, but they all share a common desire to create something unique and special.

If you're interested in getting involved in the handmade community, there are many ways to do so. You can join a local handmade group or guild, take a class or workshop, attend a handmade fair or market, start a blog or website about your handmade projects, or join an online handmade community.
