Snowblind is a powerful and moving play that explores the themes of loss and redemption. Written by Pulitzer Prize-winning playwright Paula Vogel, the play follows the story of a woman named Snow White, who is struggling to come to terms with the death of her husband. Through a series of flashbacks and dream sequences, Snow White grapples with her grief, her guilt, and her hope for the future.

Plot Summary

The play opens with Snow White sitting in a chair, staring out the window. She is dressed in a white nightgown, and her hair is pulled back into a tight bun. She is still in shock from the death of her husband, and she is struggling to make sense of her life.

As the play progresses, Snow White is visited by a series of characters, including her mother, her sister, and her husband's ghost. These characters help Snow White to confront her grief and to begin to heal.

The play reaches its climax when Snow White finally confronts her husband's ghost. In a powerful and emotional scene, Snow White tells her husband that she forgives him for his death. She also tells him that she will never forget him, and that she will always love him.

The play ends with Snow White sitting in the same chair as she was at the beginning of the play. However, this time she is no longer alone. Her husband's ghost is sitting next to her, and they are holding hands. Snow White has finally found peace, and she is ready to move on with her life.
